

Cleantech Forum Stockholm attract hundreds of investors

Sweden have been recognised as a benchmark regarding to environment technology and sustainable innovation. Now, an increasing number of Swedish investors want to follow this green initiative. The opportunity will be come to place when the conferense Cleantech Forum is arranged at the München brewery in Stockholm the 21-23th of May.

A wave of green investors

The first conference in Stockholm was appreciated by the visitors. This time the Swedish Energy Agency hope to see an increasing presence by Swedish investors.

–Large Swedish companies are increasingly focusing on sustainability. Ikea has started the fund Ikea Greentech, H&M has a venture fund and ABB has established a presence at the Swedish market in this field. It is now the first wave of green investors arrive. Next step are that the institution based investors also realise the potential for Sweden in this sector, says Andreas Stubelius.

Co-working as a refreshment

One of the Swedish investors who has been interested in Cleantech the last years, is Magnus Ryde, the founder of Spirit Venture.

– We have a great interest of cleantech, especially regarding to new technologies as batteries, solar energy and water treatment.

He belives the Swedish Energy Agency with care have the possibility to attract more Swedish investors to the field, for example with initiatives as Cleantech Forum.

– They have demonstrated that a governemental authority can keep up with the development and take a leading role in renewable and sustainable energy. Their initiative and cooperation strategies are both unique and refreshing, says Magnus Ryde.

The best exchange between investors

Markus Hökfelt is a director of Almi Invests GreenTech-fond. Almi will participate as a sponsor of the Investors evening the 21 maj during the conference in Stockholm. Besides that, they will also scouting companies and network with other investors.

– This is a world leading event within the Clean Tech sector, with profound insights about trends and best exchanges between investors. Cleantech Group have a very good knowledge in this sector, so there will always turn to sharp discussions to present in their event, says Markus Hökfelt.
